THE POLICE CLUB

A PROFILE

Every interstate police officer who visits the Police Club says the same thing:

"I wish we had a place like this."

The club is the only one of its type in Australia; and it's the one reason cops all around the nation envy their South Australian colleagues.

They marvel at its inner-city location in the Police Association building, and its position in the centre of a host of other police facilities.

But there's also its longevity: the Police Club first opened its doors for business in 1961 and became an instant social Mecca for police.

It has maintained its popularity with police and their friends through more than five decades, as other police clubs around Australia have long since disappeared.

Welcoming, hospitable and ultimately unique, the Police Club provides the rarest and most invaluable social setting for both police and the public.
